To Whom it May Concern

The stress and trauma caused when your house is destroyed by fire is immense.

The shock of realising that all your personal possessions have been destroyed is particularly poignant and may take some time for it to hit you.

My Insurance Company attended the house within hours of the fire being extinguished. It is clear in hindsight however that this cynical action is more to protect the insurers than to deal with my problem. Despite the fast response it was still quite some time before I received any comfort that my insurer would even deal with the problem by accepting liability and I had to wait for their investigation to be complete before I could commence the clean up and reinstatement of my property.

I had no hesitation in taking the advice of friends who had a similar experience. They recommended involving professional Loss Assessors who would take over all aspects of the claim perpetuation and negotiations. Having a team on my side was very important in understanding the insurance company's approach to my claim and pressing the case forward when things started to progress.

Clearys were in a position to provide a full claim management service to me, which proved ideal in the circumstances. I have no reservation in recommending their service.
